

My clients wanted their Sedona tiny house to be minimalistic and eco-friendly. To create the perfect house for them I researched green products to include to minimize the environmental footprint of this house as much as possible. I incorporated universal design principles to make the house accessible for any visitors. And finally, I conducted research of a special user group to make the house suitable for clients who struggle with generalized anxiety disorder and included those elements for an evidence based design. This house may be small but it is certainly a calming nature lovers paradise.
